

Why every couple should argue about money — and how to argue well

Chances are, you and your spouse have a major money issue you argue about occasionally. Just mentioning the tricky topic can cause the volume to rise and tempers to flare. Money issues and marital strife both strike hard at the heart. But, as we explore in our two-part series, money conflicts are actually opportunities in disguise. \(PART 1\) Why every marriage should have money arguments — and \(PART 2\) how to argue about money in a way that will bring you closer than ever >>

Your October financial tasks

Each month, we offer suggestions to chip away at your financial goals. As we start the fourth quarter, now is the time to start year-end planning >>

Friday, November 3, 7:30-9:30AM

Tax reform is happening at all levels of government. Proposals advancing through Washington are slated to be the most dramatic tax changes in decades. The state of Kansas completely changed the rules in 2017, and those with business income will be hit the hardest. You need to be prepared.

Join the Sound Stewardship experts for breakfast on Friday, November 3, to discuss how business owners are uniquely affected by these changes — and what steps you can take now to reduce the tax burden. It's a morning you can't afford to miss.

Space is limited! RSVP now to reserve your spot >>

Our response to the Equifax data breach

It's possible that 143 million Americans had personal information stolen in the recent Equifax data breach. Here's how to protect your data from being misused >>

How aggressive should your investment strategy be?

There are some interesting questions that purportedly help you determine how aggressive you should be in your investing: Do you prefer the slow lane or the fast lane? Like trying new restaurants or prefer the old favorites? There are also some generic formulas out there, like the classic "100 Minus Your Age." But these approaches are too simplistic, and overlook the significance of this in your investment strategy. So how does an investor (or their advisor) decide how aggressive to be? The seven questions we ask as we design personal investment strategies >>

Copyright © 2017 Sound Stewardship, LLC, All rights reserved.

Want to change how you receive these emails?
You can update your preferences or unsubscribe from this list
